

Betty Cuanalo

English 1010-065

Instructor Nathan Cole

December 6, 2011

Reflective Writing

As the semester started to unfold during all the past weeks and looking back, I can see progress, not only in my writing but also in my understanding of the essays in how to develop some important points in writing.

Understanding the purpose and importance of writing in essay assignments, have helped me to develop my grammar and vocabulary as well as writing skills and strategies.

After analyzing my peer reviews and the suggestions, I was able to comprehend better and understand how important in working as a group becomes throughout the course.

I feel that critical thinking was a key as well as applying all the knowledge learned from the class which helped me conclude better on the assignments requested. My most important point is that my readers can simply comprehend the idea of each final draft.

Developing my writing projects throughout the semester and learning how to use the elements of effective communication have become an essential parts in my learning process. I was able to engage how to analyze and evaluate my essays with the help of my peer reviews.

My last project completed about Women's Humans Rights, made an impact in my point of view, after researching more about the topic and analyzing the issue, I felt challenged to address the topic in a more critical thinking view therefore I was able to comprehend the different purposes of the rhetorical strategies along with the conventions of writing and acquiring substantive knowledge in the issue of my choice.